A WASHINGTON telegram dated 24th July is to the following effect :- The attorneygeneral has rendered a decision in the case of the twelve Chinese coolies who are detained at New Orleans. These coolies are on their way from Cuba to China, and wish to proceed overland to San Francisco where they expect to take steumer. It is understood that the decision is the most important ever made on the construction of the Chinese Exclusion Act, as it is said to allow coolies to proceed to San Francisco as tourists, thus establishing a precedent. Acting Secretary Bachellor, of the treasury department, to whom the attorney general has sent his decision, refuses to make the the matter public, and states that he was turn it over to Secretary Windam when he returns to the city. The Southern Pacific Railroad Co. has been the chief mover in this particular case, and sent an attorney to argue the matter before the treasury department and department of justice.

RATHER good thing happened during

Que company was acting as the defensive force protecting the aignal station and the line of advance towards New Harbour. The remaining companies represented the enemy and came on feeling for their foe in the regulation way by means of scouts and sections thrown forward in extended order. Soon the defenders were descried apparently snugly ensconced in a shelter trench Captain Roach of the s.s. Hailoong, who running along the slopes of a rising ground, nothing but their white helmets showing to mark their whereabouts. The attacking companies worked their way onward with fighting line supports and reserves all complete, firing as they advanced, the defenders meanwhile reserving their fire until the attack came into close quarters. The final rush was just being made when all of a sudden from flank and from rear a rapid succession of heavy velleys of rifle fire assailed the astunished enemy, mowing them down metaphorically, and putting them to utter rout at the very moment when they were trumphantly 'rushing' the position. To add to their confusion and discomfiture it: was discovered that all the perspiring energies of the attack had been wasted on a hundred empty helmets which a crafty lender had caused to be disposed about in a natural line just as though each adorned the head of its respective Thomas Atkins. Wearing forage caps, the defenders, after decorating the position with their more noticeable helmets, had withdrawn to a flank and prepared a 'surprise packet' for their THE Hiogo News is informed by the agent | unsuspecting fees. > ALLEGED THIEVING ON THE S.S. 'TAIYUAN.'

Before Mr Wodehouse to-day, in the Police Court, the head cabin-boy, three other boys, two cooks and an assistant gook employed on board the s.s. Taiyuan, were charged with stesling a quantity of bedclothing, table-linen, provisions and other articles be onging to the ship.

D. Dennedy, P.C., said-Yesterday at 8.30 p.m. I was on duty at Victoria Harbour in a police boat. I saw a sampan going towards Pedder's Wharf without showing any light. I stopped it and asked why there was no light. The boat-woman said she was just going to put one up. I tien searched the boat. I found there four parcels containing a number of time of condensed milk, sugar, table-linen and other articles. I asked the boat-woman where tion has been patented by Mr H. M. Har- her. I took the woman to the Police Sta-

Cheung Mui, boat-woman, said-Yesterday after 7 p.m. I was in my boat alongside a steamer. The second, third and fourth prisoners put the three parcels produced into my boat and told me to row them ashore. I took them to the Wharf near the Victoria Hotel. There they went ashore and said they would call for the parcels on the following day, when I was to go back to the same wharf. After that was going to my place when the police stopped me. I recognise each of the priso ere; they all came into my boat. They lowered the things into the buat from the gangway. The prisoners are the men who came into my boat. I know all the prisoners : I have taken them ashore before

On the prisoners being asked if they had any questions to put, the first and second stated that the others took the things. Montague Beart said Tam a passenger broker and assistant in Mesers Butterfield and Swire's. I see the parcels in Court. I identify the two blankets, two sheets and two table-cloths as property belonging to the China Navigation Company, Some time in May last I supplied these blankets and table-cloths to the s.s. > London, July 25. - It is positively esserted that Parnell's support of the Comment proposal to increase the allowance to the Prince of Wales is due not so much to Jir Gladstone's influence as to his intimate knowledge of the Prince's political views. more es scially those on the subject of the treatment of Ireland. It is stated that notwithstanding his great respect for Mr Gladstone and his sense of obligation to him for his great services in behalf of Ireland, Mr Parnell could never have followed his lead into the camp of the Tory Government were it not for the certainty that in doing so ne is aiding the Prince of Wales, whose sympathies are with the popular cause of Ireland, The Irish Nationalist members had a meeting this afternoon to discuss their attitude towards the question of grants, and although there was no attempt to bring about united action on the subject. a very pronounced majority committed themselves to the course which Mr Parnell has cut out out for himself. A small acction of the Irish party will, however, follow the lead of Mr O'Connor in opposition to the Government's proposals.

There was an unusually large attendance of members in the Commons to-day. The interest in to-day's debate on the part of the public was also made manifest by crowded galleries. The great attraction was the debate on Royal Grants. When Mr Smith moved the adoption of a report of a special committee on Royalty Grants every eye was directed towards him. Ho was promptly questioned by members of the Opposition as to the present condition of the Queen's finances. They demanded to know what savings the Queen had made out of allowances already made for the support of the Royal Family. Mr Smith declined to reply to the questions, which he claimed were entirely irrelevant to the subject in hand. It was not the duty of the Sovereign, he said, to provide for the Royal Family.
